

About the legislation and technique section

The articles on building legislation and technique give a brief overview of the practices/ building customs that dominated the new building of multi-storey housing from the middle of the 1800s until the end of the 1900s.

Attached is a description of common alterations that are most likely to have been made to buildings in the period following their construction.

The changing architectural expression of the period has been discussed extensively elsewhere and the directory of links points to appropriate references.
