

Stud walls

It is possible to find lightweight non-load-bearing walls made with wooden skeletal frames clad with sheets (plasterboard) in experimental buildings of the 1950s, but their use is not particularly widespread in multi-storey housing.

The construction principle forms the basis of a number of wall systems in use up to the present time, although now the skeleton framing is more typically replaced with structural metal.

